The Chinese travel agency refused to pay a fine for using an unlicensed tour operator in Singapore, an official of the State Administration of Foreign Exchange said on Monday. The unnamed tour operator was fined between S$2,400 and S$2,600 ($1,859 and $1,998) for allowing its employees to book travel arrangements using social media like WeChat and Weibo. The company was also ordered to restrict its use of social media to booking only. "Any Chinese tour operators found using WeChat or Weibo during the booking of overseas tours will be punished with a fine," said Zheng Zijun, a spokesman for the State Administration of Foreign Exchange, which is responsible for regulating the country's tourism industry. Charity boss Richard Branson is set to fly into the British Virgin Islands to visit the popular Caribbean hideaway this week, ending his nearly two-year visit to the island. The Virgin Group founder has become an island celebrity after his near-death accident in July 2012 and his subsequent arrival to the BVI as part of his "Miracle Miles" campaign to raise $1.5 billion for global medical research charities. Branson took to Twitter earlier this week to say he would be flying into the island on Thursday. He tweeted: "Great news! I'll be arriving in the British Virgin Islands for the first time in nearly two years. It's time to catch up with old friends and new and see how business continues to thrive after I left in the summer. Excited to be back.". Members of the island's tourism industry will be waiting to greet the billionaire at his destination on the island, since the global airline carrier was the first airline to fly to the island in 2013. While Branson flies in on a Virgin Atlantic plane, the US airline, Piedmont Aviation will be his transport on Thursday. Virgin Atlantic's agreement with the British Virgin Islands was to fly to the island on Fridays and Saturdays. Branson will be visiting the 82157476af
